MEDIA ADVISORY

National Academy of Public Administration to Release No Time to Wait Part II: Building a Public Service for the 21st Century

WASHINGTON, DC – A Panel of the National Academy of Public Administration on September 25 will release a new white paper on the future of public service, called No Time to Wait Part II: Building a Public Service for the 21st Century. The report is sponsored by the Volcker Alliance and the Samuel Freeman Charitable Trust.

Following the 2017 release of the initial No Time to Wait white paper – which emphasized the need for a federated human capital system focused on mission first, principles always, and accountability for both – the highly anticipated new report will build on that framework, with more detailed recommendations and with a greater sense of urgency for action.

At the September 25 roll-out of the paper, the Panel’s recommendations will be discussed by a blue-ribbon panel of experts in the field of public administration. In addition, Bryan Hancock, Partner, McKinsey and Company, will speak on The Future of Work. The event is sponsored by Management Concepts, Inc.
